

Statistical correlations

This is a compilation of how states rank according to their voting records, faith, beliefs, etc., from polls and research, and their possible relations to each other. List of states at left are according to number of evangelicals according to Pew Research 2008 (p. 103). NOTE that consistent with what was the historical norm, but was changed by the liberal media, in my state voting stats REPUBLICANS are in BLUE, and DEMOCRATS are in RED (which I think it is more befitting to their Communist/Socialists type leanings — not that the Republicans are the kingdom of God or our salvation either). Note that from approx #26-#29 may often be swing states.

 Based on itemized charitable contributions as a share of income after excluding taxes, housing, and other necessities. Information is taken from tax returns of people who earned at least $50,000 in 2008A different study which ranks states according to the amount of charitable income given is here.

Notes: "Happiness" data derived from two data sets. One included subjective personal reports of happiness, while the other included objective measures, such as state population density, air quality, home prices + other factors known to normally impact quality of life. However, the latter method would not necessarily denote the happiest people.

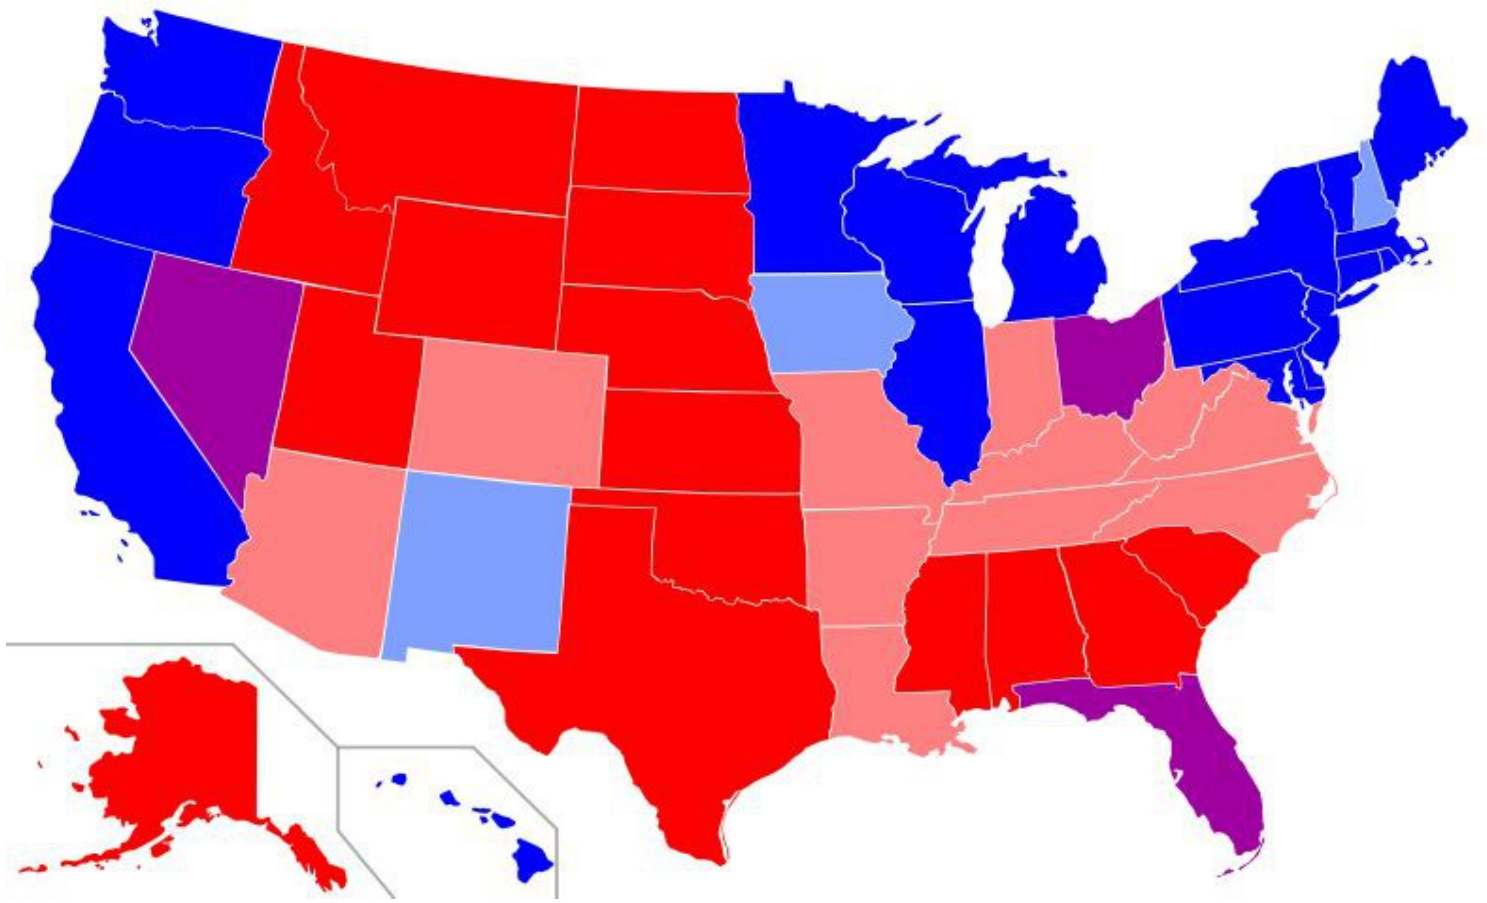

Misc. data: Massachusetts had the highest percentage of Catholics at 36 percent, New York, Illinois and New Hampshire also had 50 or more Catholic legislators: <http://www.census.gov/compendia/statab/cats/population/religion.html>. Note that in map below, Republican are in red and Democrats in blue, as per main stream media preference, unlike mine as seen above, where the colors are more ideologically fitting.

Summary of results of the 1996, 2000, 2004, and 2008 presidential elections:

-  States carried by the Republican in all four elections
-  States carried by the Republican in three of the four elections
-  States carried by each party twice in the four elections
-  States carried by the Democrat in three of the four elections
-  States carried by the Democrat in all four elections
